Description and learning objectives:

Hypersensitivity is a double-edged sword. Not only does it create apprehensive patients, but it also makes it challenging for clinicians to perform necessary procedures. The fear of hypersensitivity can even be the driving factor for a patient to decline necessary treatment, even when they are aware that they need it. Providing optimal solutions are necessary for improved patient care and have many positive outcomes for clinicians. During this CE webinar, we will • Identify the different sources of hypersensitivity • Learn various products to address hypersensitivity whether it is procedural or residual • Understand the mechanism of action of various desensitizing products and how to select the correct one or combination • Learn how to implement these products into your current clinical protocols
